“ Those who knew Terry knew he was passionate about jogging. He started jogging in his teens and jogged daily well into his forties and fifties. He enjoyed traveling to marathons and he also enjoyed competing locally. By the early 90's he had acquired over 50 trophies, most of which were first place.

He was also an avid Nascar fan. His crew started following Nascar in the mid-sixties and made friends in Darlington and Bristol who looked for them annually over the decades. He was a dedicated Kulwicki, Earnhardt, and Allison fan.

Funny story, after a race our party entered a restaurant in Darlington. As usual, Terry was all decked out in Dale Earnhardt (or Davey Allusion) gear. Someone in the restaurant mistook him for a crew chief and yelled out the crew chief's name. Several people cheered Terry on as he beamed, waved, said hello, and soaked in all the adoration from the restaurant full of enthusiastic Nascar fans. (It would have been rude to point out they were wrong.) I encouraged him to just go along with it. :)

Another year another sorry... As we were all checking into our rooms there may have been some chattering in the halls and doors closing. Not long afterwards, there was a knock on my door. I opened it and the fella standing there said, "If you don't mind, keep it down, I have a big day tomorrow." HA! What an understatement, it was none other than Nascar driver Richard Trickle himself. Yes, we apologized, and I did get the autograph.

Eventhough Terry enjoyed many aspects of his life, he was most passionate about his family and friends, whom he loved most dearly.
